

Loss Splitting in Jewish Law: A Covid-19 Example

INTRODUCTION

Economic losses are an inescapable part of commercial life. Suppose a train cancellation leaves you stranded at Penn Station and you have to splurge on an Uber to get home. Or a babysitter cancels at the last minute causing you to stay home and lose a day of work. Or a vehicle crashes into yours, leaving your vehicle in need of repair. In cases such as these, you suffer a loss. One of the primary tasks of a legal system is to determine how to distribute these losses between the relevant parties.

Consider the following true set of facts.<sup>2</sup> Ms. Stein drives a group of preschoolers to the local yeshiva day school. In September 2019, Mr. Grossman hired Ms. Stein to transport his son to and from school each day. From September through December, Mr. Grossman paid Ms. Stein at the end of each month. Beginning in January, however, Mr. Grossman decided that it was too burdensome to remember to write a check each month, so he paid Ms. Stein in advance for the remainder of the year.

The arrangement went smoothly until March 2020, when the school shut down because of the Covid-19 pandemic, under the governor's statewide orders. Is Mr. Grossman entitled to recover the amount he prepaid for March through June? Or is Ms. Stein allowed to keep the payment, even though she will not be providing transportation services? Or does justice require a different resolution? In previous articles, we discussed several principles of Jewish law that might bear on contracts canceled by the Covid-19 pandemic, some of which may be relevant to deciding the present case.<sup>3</sup> In this article, I focus on the halakhic principle of loss sharing.

LOSS SPLITTING WHEN FORCE MAJEURE AFFECTS BOTH PARTIES TO A CONTRACT EQUALLY

The halakhic precedent for splitting a loss when a contract is frustrated by circumstances beyond the parties' control is articulated in a responsum of Ra'avan (R.

Eliezer b. Natan of Bonn, 1090-1170), who was asked to rule on the following case. A landlord had leased a property to a tenant for two years. The tenant paid the entire rent upfront at the beginning of the lease. But violence against the Jewish community during the lease term caused the Jewish citizens of the city to flee for their lives. The tenant fled with them, abandoning the leased property for several months until it was safe to return.

The parties disagree over whether the tenant was obligated to pay rent for the months that he had to abandon the property. The tenant argued that he is entitled to be refunded for the months of rent during which he could not use the property when he fled the city. The landlord counters that he is entitled to keep the rent that was paid for those months because the house was structurally sound and available, and it was the tenant's decision to abandon it.<sup>4</sup>

Ra'avan rules that the parties are to split the loss, with each party bearing half of it. Accordingly, Ra'avan ordered the landlord to return half of the rent for the months that the property sat unoccupied.<sup>5</sup> Ra'avan explains that neither party was more, or less, responsible than the other for the contract having been frustrated. The contract was frustrated by the violence that affected the entire Jewish community (makat medinah), and thus the force majeure (אונס) that undermined the contract affected both parties equally.<sup>6</sup> Therefore, Ra'avan reasons,

לאיש כלבי קרובי אהובי ר' אליעזר בר' שמשון, אני אליעזר משיב על עסק ראובן נשכר בית משמעון לשתי שנים והקדים ונתן לו השכר של ב' שנים, ובתוך אותן ב' שנים ברחו היהודים מן העיר מפני פחד נפשם וברח גם הוא והניח הבית ריקם, ואח"כ חזרו היהודים וגם הוא ורוצה שישלם לו שמעון מה שהיה חוץ מביתו, ושמעון משיב ביתי היה לפניך ואתה חוכרתו ואיני משלם לך.

<sup>6</sup> In one striking formulation, Ra'avan writes that the violence rendered the homes uninhabitable and caused the residents to flee. On this formulation, the violence undercut both parties' performance under the contract. The landlord could no longer supply a habitable home (given the violent social conditions), and the tenant could no longer live there. Ra'avan writes:

הכא איכא למימר גזירת המכה על שניהם היתה על הבתים להיות בדודים ועל האנשים להיות גולים הלכך לתא דשניהם הוא יחלוקו ההפסד.

Ra'avan bases his ruling on his interpretation of Bava Metzia 105b. The Mishnah there discusses a tenant-sharecropper who pays a fixed rate for his right to use and work the field. If the crop was destroyed by a natural disaster, such as a flood or a plague of locusts, the Mishnah rules that the tenant-sharecropper is not obligated to pay the entire rent (מן חכורו). Ra'avan interprets this to mean that the tenant-sharecropper pays half of the rent, effectively splitting the loss with the landlord:

ומיהו מנכה מן חכורו קתני ולא כל חכורו, דכיון דמכת מדינה היא על שניהם הוי ההפסד וזה יפסיד מחצה וזה יפסיד מחצה.

justice requires that the parties bear the loss equally by splitting it between themselves.<sup>7</sup>

It is important to emphasize that the loss splitting principle articulated by Ra'avan is not conceptualized as a compromise or court-imposed settlement (peshara). Rather it is conceptualized as a principle of din. It is a halakhic principle of justice that when force majeure affects both parties equally, the parties are to share the loss, with each party bearing half of it.<sup>8</sup>

GROSSMAN V. STEIN

Let's return to the case of Ms. Stein and Mr. Grossman. The facts of their case are similar to the case decided by Ra'avan. Neither Ms. Stein nor Mr. Grossman was at fault for non-performance. A third party (the governor) had shut down the school in the face of a nation-wide health pandemic (makat medinab), making performance unreasonable or purposeless to the parties. There was no school for Ms. Stein to דכיון דמכת מדינה היא על שניהם הוי ההפסד וזה יפסיד מחצה וזה יפסיד מחצה... דמכת מדינה להאי דשניהם הוא לפיכך ההפסד על שניהם.

Sema (Choshen Mishpat 321:6) applies this loss splitting principle to a case that is even more analogous to the facts of Grossman v. Stein. Sema discusses a case where a parent hired a rebbe to educate his child, but the government later outlawed Torah study. Sema notes that in such a case the contract is frustrated by an outside force (makat medinab) that affects both parties equally, with neither party more responsible than the other for not performing under the contract. Sema therefore rules that the parties should split the loss, with the father paying the rebbe for half of the value of the contract:

מסתברא לומר כיון דמכת מדינה היא המשכיר והשוכר שוין בהדבר ואין לומר דמזלו דשום אחד גרם... יהיה ההפסד על שניהן... גם במלמד זה שגזר המושל שלא ללמד יהלוקו.

For a discussion of this Sema, see Rabbi Michael Zylberman, "Employment Contracts and Covid-19", Jewishprudence (January 2021).

<sup>8</sup> Contrast Ra'avan's position (and Sema's, supra n. 7) holding that the loss should be split as a matter of pure justice (din) with the position of Hatam Sofer and later commentators who in similar scenarios agree with the legal outcome of loss splitting but ground it conceptually in compromise (pesharah). See, e.g., Rabbi J. David Bleich's discussion of Hatam Sofer's position, Tradition 53:1 (2021), p.103:

"with regard to a comparable occurrence, apparently in the Napoleonic period during the Franco-Austrian War of 1809. Hatam Sofer reports that he himself paid tuition in full to the tutors of his children [even though they were unable to teach]. However, apparently as a compromise, he directed the bet din to compel parents to pay only half the usual fee."

For further examples of authorities who endorse loss splitting in similar scenarios but as a matter of compromise (pesharah), not din, see, Rabbi Michael Zylberman, "Employment Contracts and Covid-19", Jewishprudence (January 2021), section III,B.

drive to, and there was no reason for Mr. Grossman to send his child to a locked school building. If the cases are analogous, as they appear to be, then based on the ruling of Ra'avan, the proper halakhic resolution is for the parties to split the loss, with Ms. Stein returning half of the amount Mr. Grossman advanced for March through June.

In fact, that is exactly how the parties amicably resolved their dispute, without having to litigate their case in beit din. The parties elected to resolve their dispute in accordance with the principle articulated by Ra'avan. Had the case proceeded to litigation, it is quite possible that the dayanim would have arrived at a similar conclusion.<sup>9</sup>

JEWISH LAW AND THE COMMON LAW: TWO DIFFERENT APPROACHES

Note how halakha's approach of loss splitting in the above type of case differs from the common law's approach. Under the common law doctrines of frustration of purpose and impossibility, a court would determine whether the contract remains enforceable under the circumstances or whether to excuse the parties from performance. The common law approaches the case from the perspective of "winner takes all," assigning the loss on an all-or-nothing basis.<sup>10</sup>

For example, in the above case of Grossman v. Stein, a court might find that the governor's closure of schools frustrated the purpose of the contract between Mr. Grossman and Ms. Stein, as the purpose of the contract—transportation to school—had been extinguished. On that theory, Mr. Grossman would be excused from having to pay Ms. Stein, and he would be entitled to recover the entire amount that he advanced. Alternatively, a court might find that the contract remains enforceable, such as when the risk of school closure was foreseeable to the parties when they entered into the agreement. On that theory, Ms. Stein would be entitled to keep the entire amount that she received.

Jewish law's approach of loss splitting avoids either of these extremes. Rather than picking a winner who takes all, Jewish law maintains that where parties are equally affected by the loss, and where the parties are in moral equipoise regarding their responsibility or non-responsibility for it, they are to share the loss between themselves, with each party bearing half of the cost.

<sup>9</sup> Though the dayanim might consider some of the principles discussed in our earlier articles to be relevant as well. For those principles, see the articles cited in Supra n. 3.

<sup>10</sup> In a previous article, we discussed the common law's approach and when it might be incorporated into halakha under a theory of minbag ha-sochrim, see Tzirel Klein, "Commercial Custom, Common Law, and Contracts Impacted by Covid-19," (Jewishprudence, July 2020).

Thus, the different systems of law advance different conceptions of justice in their approaches to contracts frustrated by force majeure where the parties are in moral equipoise. The common law picks a winner and a loser, such that one party must bear the entire loss. Jewish law endorses loss sharing by assigning half of the loss to each party.<sup>11</sup>

<sup>11</sup> Jewish law provides for loss sharing in other areas as well. See Bava Metzia 79b (one permutation of the wine-shipping case), Bava Metzia 2a (two parties exerting equal physical possession over a garment), Bava Kamma 15a (liability for damages caused by a mild-mannered ox), and Bava Kamma 46a (Sumchus's opinion for how courts should resolve disputes where there is insufficient evidence to support either party's claim). Here, however, we must be careful. For although all of these cases involve splitting a claim fifty-fifty between the parties, the underlying legal principle appears to differ between these cases. Further, some of these cases are better characterized as involving claim-splitting rather than loss-splitting.
